New developments in terrestrial laser scanning (TLS) provide unprecedented three-dimensional in situ information of trees and forests (Malhi et al., 2018). This 3D information is argued to play a key role in monitoring and understanding how terrestrial ecosystems are functioning and physically changing due to climate change (Calders et al., 2020 ; Verbeeck et al., 2019).

Active scanning of a surface by using Light Detection And Ranging (LIDAR) is a standard technique in topographic mapping, change detection, and hazard monitoring that can be accomplished from an aircraft or using a ground-based system, where it is known as Terrestrial Laser Scanning (TLS). In particular, TLS is an emerging technique in geological applications for short-term geomorphic change, slope stability monitoring, and fracture mapping.
